NACE stands for "Nomenclature Generale des Activites Economiques dans l'Union Europeenne" (General Name for Economic Activities in the European Union). The latest 2008 version is based on "International Standard Industrial Classification of all economic activities" (ISIC) of the United Nations. The codes start with numeric (e.g. 1. Agriculture, forestry and fishing) are from the 1990 version and those ones start with alphabet (e.g. A - Agriculture, forestry and fishing) are from the latest 2008 version.

Public Filings Compliance - looks into a number of compliance requirements such as whether Subject is promptly filing its annual return (e.g. within 42 days after the anniversary of the date of incorporation (for private companies having a

CORPORATE STRUCTURE 公司結構

The following statutory information is based on the examination of Subject's file at the Companies' Registry (CR), Hong Kong.

(For Listed Company, only Substantial Shareholders ("SS") are listed, as based on the latest available annual or interim reports. It is noted that some of the shares held (including long, short and other positions) might have been duplicated due to capacities of "Beneficial owner", "Interest of controlled corporation", "Interest of spouse", "Family interest", etc., which mean the total number of shares held by SS may not tally with (or may exceed) the authorized and/or issued shares. Therefore, both the No. and % of issued shares may be irrelevant due to system calculation. Duplicate holding (if any) will be elaborated under the "Notes to Substantial Shareholders" on the Structure Remark section.)

MANAGING CUSTOMER RISK during and after the COVID-19 Crisis!

As the economic fallout from the COVID-19 pandemic continues, businesses are facing nearly unprecedented risk that their customers, who may have been transformed from financially strong to seriously distressed in a matter of days, will be unable to continue paying for goods and services. Effectively managing this credit risk will become both more difficult and important for businesses as the economic crisis continues. This will undoubtedly require decisions whether to keep supplying goods or providing services on credit basis when a customer's solvency is in doubt.

Some doubtful credit situations can be managed by adjusting sales terms for new orders, such as requiring more frequent or advance payments. However, the situation is much more complicated if long-term supply or service agreements are in effect, or if an already accepted order is to be fulfilled over time. In such cases, a business may find itself contractually obligated to continue providing goods and services despite substantial doubt about whether payment will ever be received.

Subject to your existing contract with your customers, there may be tools however within the law to manage such circumstances. For example, a contract may be readily terminated when a customer acknowledges it will not be able to meet its payment obligations. It makes sense too when a seller of goods or services that has an objectively reasonable basis to believe that its customer cannot make payment (or meet other obligations under the contract) to suspend deliveries and demand reasonable assurances that the customer can, indeed, fulfil its obligations. The form and scope of such assurances vary with the circumstances but could include measures such as providing financial information establishing the customer's ability to pay or posting security such as a letter of credit or personal guarantee. Subject to the existing contract, the seller is not obligated to resume shipments or providing services unless such reasonable assurances are provided.

Businesses can take several steps if it appears likely that customers will be unable to meet their payment obligations during the current crisis:

- Maintain channels of communications with distressed customers. Attempt to analyse whether current financial difficulties are likely to pass with the current crisis, or if the business is in difficulties.
- Consider modifying sales terms for new orders, such as by requiring payment in advance, deposit, or a higher deposit prior to delivery of goods or services.
- When sales terms are subject to an existing agreement and cannot be changed, a properly tailored demand for assurances can be a valuable tool to manage and assess risk when there are concerns about a customer's ability to make future payments.

Although the current economic turmoil requires businesses to take decisive action to protect their interests, the decision to resort to any of these remedies, as always, should be balanced against the need to maintain customer relationships during and after the current crisis.
